

HUGHES FINDS A REFUGE FOLLOWING CITY'S ACCLAIM

Tremendous Welcome Was More Unnerving Than The Hazards of The Air

STUNNED BY GLORY

Next Public Appearance of Leader and Crew May Be At Fair Grounds

NEW YORK, July 16—(INS)—Be-wildered by the city's tremendous ac-claim, which to his self-effacing nature was more unnerving than any hazard of the air, Howard Hughes found no secret refuge today on the secluded Long Island estate of a friend.

The shy hero of the 'round-the-world flight fled in his big red automobile last night to the estate, near Oyster Bay, leaving his four companions at a hotel off Central Park, to make their own week-end plans.

Hughes seemed stunned by the glory and homage paid him by New York yesterday as he was carried to the surging crest of cheers from the Battery up the narrow canyon of Broadway to City Hall.

In his modest fashion he tried to submerge himself as merely one of 20 or more men, including his flying companions, technicians and Army and Navy advisers, who had made the remarkable achievement possible.

But New York would have none of it. The city took him to its heart. After the welcoming ceremonies were ended crowds followed him wherever he went and, finally, in genuine bewilderment, Hughes sped to the seclusion of the Long Estate.

At the hotel here, Thomas M. Thurlow and Harry P. M. Connor, navigators of the plane, and Richard Stoddart, the radio man, remained with their wives along with the unmarried Edward Lund, the flight engineer.

Their plans for the next few days were indefinite. Their next probable appearance with Hughes will be Wednesday night at a celebration dinner given by Grover Whalen, president of the World's Fair, at the Terrace Club on the Fair Grounds.

Report 40,000 Troops Are "Marooned" On Teruel Front

HENDAYE, French-Spanish Frontier, July 16—(INS)—Forty thousand Spanish government troops today were reported virtually "marooned" among rugged mountains by the insurgent advance on the Teruel front.

Insurgent advances said it was likely that most of the men would be able to filter through the lines and escape, but they lacked roads over which to withdraw their fighting equipment, which would fall into the Insurgent's hands.

On the coastal front of Castellon Province, however, the tide of conflict turned and the militiamen of Government General Jose Miaja, pressing back the Insurgents, occupied the important heights of Mt. Marcos, 34 miles north of Valencia.

Shiners In The Shade

By "The Stroller"
Local motorists have two favored spots where they like to polish their automobiles. Both locations are on well traveled routes but both have plenty of shade and the car-conscious ones rub and rub beneath the shade of the trees.

One of the spots is at the intersection of Pond street and Wilson avenue, while another is on Prospect street, near Jefferson avenue. Each day some motorist can be seen at these places, polishing his car until it is mirror-like.

WHAT'S WRONG WITH AMERICA?

(Philadelphia Inquirer, June 20, 1938)

American tourists overseas this summer are likely to find themselves bombarded on all sides with such questions as:

"What is wrong with the United States? Why is your country having another depression? Why are so many millions unemployed? Why are so many on relief?"

"You have incalculable material wealth. You have untold natural resources. You have plenty of farm land to provide your people with food."

"You are not beset with war terrors as we are. Your army and navy costs are far less than ours. Thousands of miles of ocean separate you from the troubles of Europe and of Asia. To us your problems appear childish. Why aren't you prosperous? What's wrong with America?"

Well, what IS wrong with America? Counting out Germany and Italy, which have solved their unemployment and relief puzzles by the simple but tragic expedient of keeping thousands at work building vast armaments and manufacturing incredible amounts of munitions, Europe by all accounts has made notable progress upward from the depression lows of 1930-33.

England, although now also engaged in a stupendous rearming program, has made long strides in recovery, and, although it has re-

Troops Guard Jerusalem

Jerusalem, July 16—British troops stood guard throughout Jerusalem and other cities of the Holy Land today as tension between Arabs and Jews increased. Although the Sabbath brought a semblance of calm to the areas, French residents of a suburb of Haifa were provided with arms by the military to defend themselves in event of new riots. No new disturbances were reported since a band of brigands attempted to attack a Jewish settlement where a number of American immigrants reside.

Thousands of British troops are now on guard in Jerusalem and elsewhere with orders to keep crowds moving and break up all demonstrations immediately.

MAY AGAIN USE THE CANAL THROUGH HERE

But Delaware Valley Protective Ass'n Feels Skeptical About the Report

BECAUSE OF EXPENSE

The Delaware Division of the Pennsylvania Canal is being held by the owners, it is reported, for renewed use as a navigable waterway. This information has been given to the Delaware Valley Protective Association.

The new use for which it is to be rejuvenated is to bring coke to Bristol—the barges to be towed by tractors—the coke to be processed so as to produce saleable products including gas and the residue to be sold for fuel in the form of briquettes. A well-known New York banking firm is reported to be the present owners of the canal and a cement company is also reported to be financially interested.

The condition of the canal necessitates the use of a large sum of money to restore it to a navigable condition. One section in Morrisville is completely filled and used as a railway spur. The street crossings in the borough have also been lowered by filling the canal and removing the bridges. The aqueduct at Point Pleasant must be built, the tow path is badly damaged, and the canal requires a lot of deepening. The locks require considerable repair.

All of the street crossings at Bristol as well as through Bristol and Falls townships have been filled in, and all bridges done away with.

Officials of the D. V. P. A. and people of the valley familiar with the condition of the canal express both interest and skepticism in the project, but, to some of them it seems to explain the change in the attitude of the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company.

The Supreme Court did not give out a decision on July first on the appeal of the Commonwealth and the D. V. P. A. for a reversal of the Dauphin County Court's dismissal of the Commonwealth's declared forfeiture.

This decision of the Supreme Court will not be made until September and in the meantime residents of the Valley are complaining to the D. V. P. A. about the condition of the waterway. The placid canal would be more serene in the consciousness of the Valley folk if the water would move a little faster and carry away the vegetable and animal matter floating in the still waters.

The chief of the Department of Sanitation at Harrisburg has promised to aid in the fight for clean water, and property owners along the canal are requested by the D. V. P. A. to send their complaints direct to the Department at Harrisburg.

Administration Leaders Divided On Special Session

HARRISBURG, July 16—(INS)—Administration leaders, divided again on a crucial political decision, reportedly prepared today for a week-end showdown on whether to meet charges of graft and corruption with a special session of the Legislature.

Pledged to secrecy through almost a week of executive mansion conferences, they kept their counsel despite one open expression of opposition to any antidote as strong as legislative action.

Sunday, however, was expected to bring another conference of party bigwigs with Gov. George H. Earle. If any forceful move is to be taken to bring "into the open" the accusations that already has been consigned to Grand Jury investigation, it was expected to be decided then.

AROUND WORLD IN FOUR DAYS

Lady Luck continued to ride with Howard Hughes and they circled the Globe in less than four days, halving the Wiley Post mark of a trifle less than eight days.

Four days to go around the world! How that would make Jules Verne open his eyes. The great French romancer sent his traveler around the circle in 80 days. Readers of fiction of those days followed the persistent traveler with intense interest as he overcame the difficulties he encountered. They mentally cheered him when he finished his journey with some minutes to spare. But they really doubted that it could ever be done. And then Nellie Bly in after years set out to show that it could not only be done, but done in less time. And she did it.

After that the other "round-the-world champions" came into being. But nothing much happened until aerial navigation had been developed. It was in 1924 that the first world flight was made by fliers from the United States army. Army fliers had made the first Atlantic crossing in a very leisurely way. That stimulated ambition for greater achievement in the air. From the viewpoint of today, the first world flight was nothing to crow about. But it was a first. And the first always stands as a first and is entitled to a crowd or two no matter what later days may bring forth. The army fliers took their time about their world flight. They were from March to September completing it.

Perhaps it is too much to say that pioneering in aerial navigation is a thing of the past. But the days of pure experimentation appear to be pretty well over. What impends seem to be along the line of greater strength of ship, greater power of propulsion, greater safety in the air, greater carrying capacity. These are the things to which designers and engineers and promoters are giving their attention.

Two great aerial companies have plans about perfected for the establishment of regular passenger service between Europe and America. Passenger service across the Pacific—with intervening stops—is already well established. Will round-the-world passenger service by air, with stops scheduled in all the important capitals, be the next development of aviation?

FAMILY REUNIONS

Days of summer and early autumn see many family clans assembled for reunion festivities. It is not an easy thing, in the case of most families, to get them together for such a gathering. They are apt to be scattered over the world, and many of them have almost forgotten family ties. Some do not know their cousins, perhaps rarely write to their own brothers and sisters.

A good dinner and jolly speeches make everyone feel good at such occasions. Promises of eternal friendship are made, possibly to be forgotten when the cares of daily life settle down on these folk again.

WHAT'S WRONG WITH AMERICA?

cently suffered some reverses, general business in the British Isles is reported to be good. France, while struggling with political, social and monetary difficulties, is represented as having active trade.

Sweden, Norway, Denmark and Finland from all accounts are enjoying prosperity without precedent. These four countries, according to tales told by voyagers, have succeeded better than any others in adjusting the delicate relationship of government to business and in making social legislation work to national advantage.

Why is the United States, blessed by the Creator with almost every kind of treasure known to earth and inhabited by a race of courageous, self-reliant men and women, bumping along in a depression rut with more than 12,000,000 jobless and more than 20,000,000 on relief? Are the Scandinavians smarter than we? Are the British more resourceful?

American observers at recent sessions of the House of Commons are impressed with the studious concern there expressed for the welfare of business and industry. Repeated warnings are uttered by representatives of the Government and by the Opposition against any acts or policies which might unsettle the markets or disrupt trade. British business is heavily taxed to help meet budget needs. But Britain's Government and Parliament are striving by every means in their power to protect and further the interests of Britain's business men.

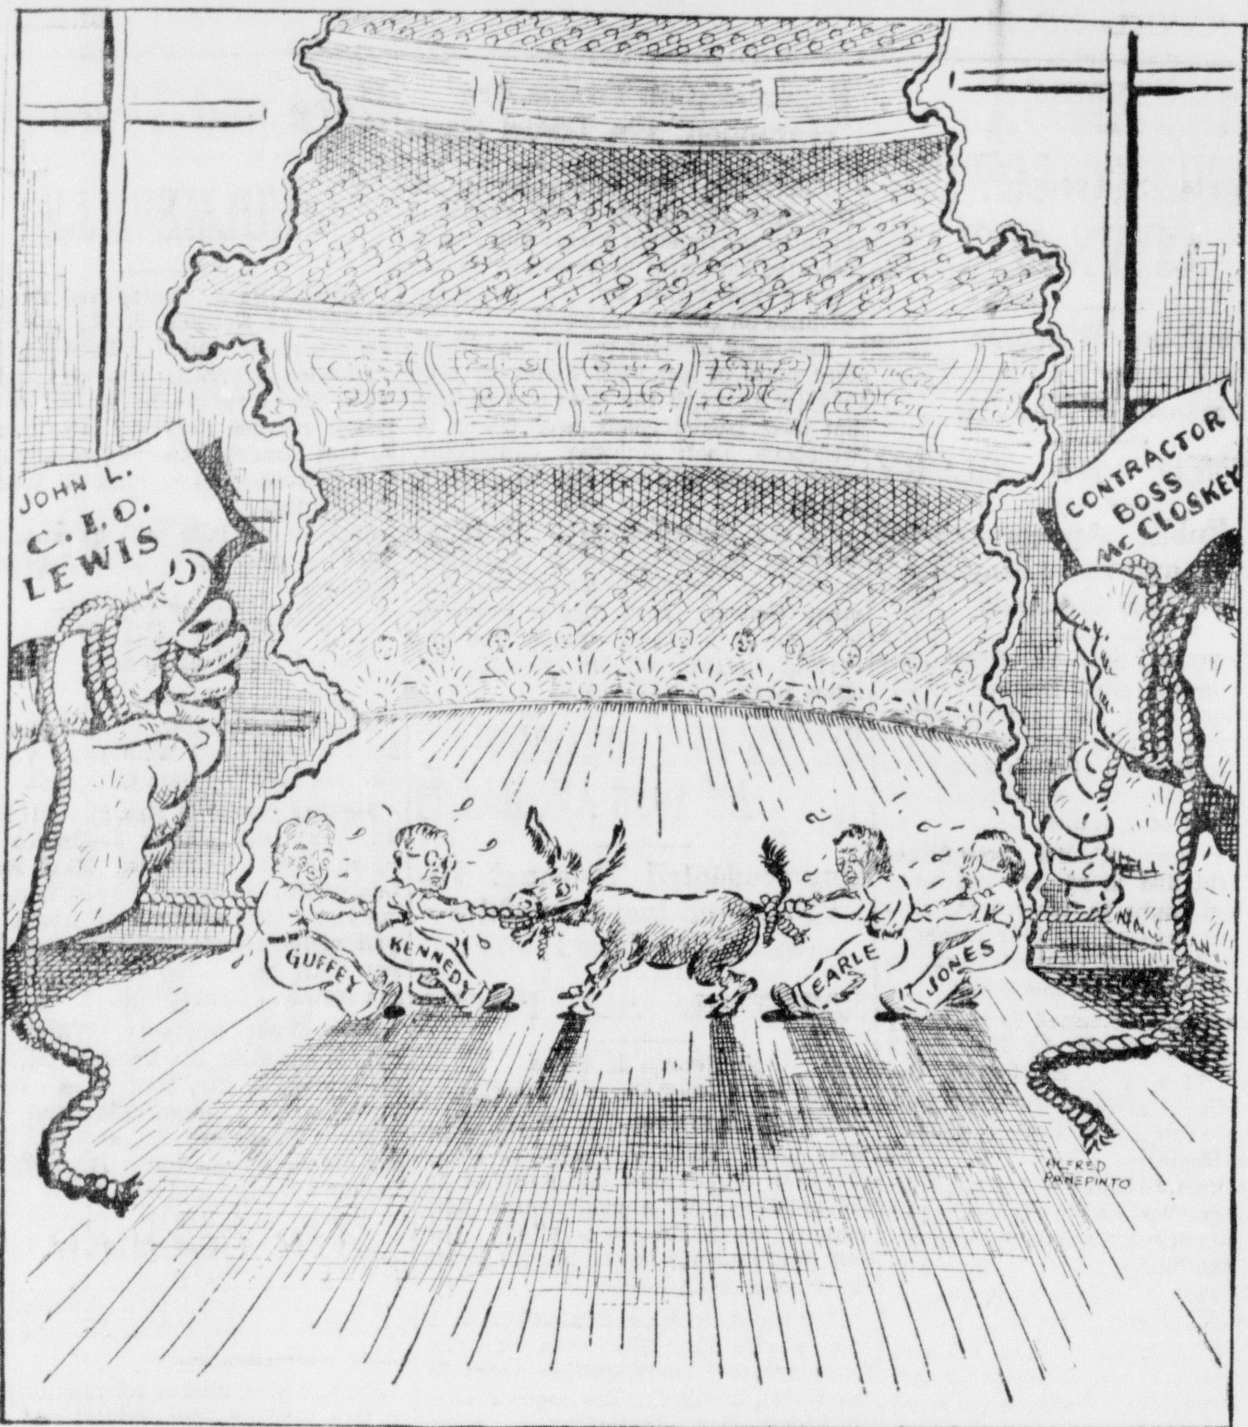

Can the same be said of America's Government and Congress? So far as is known there is no country on earth save the United States that is afflicted with a Government which consistently and determinedly treats business as an arch-foe of the people and industry as a blight to be fought with every weapon at hand.

Disregarding the Communist and Fascist States, there is no country on earth save the United States whose Government does not seek to preserve, protect and in every possible way strengthen its productive organism, the creator of its wealth and its jobs and the mainstay of its people.

Congress has gone home, ignoring pleas for Government co-operation with business, with virtually nothing accomplished for the aid of industry except limited tax revision grudgingly permitted by the President to become law. On the other hand appalling new burdens were piled on business and billions of the people's money poured out to roll up new debts and higher taxes.

What is to be done about this grave situation in America?

POLITICAL PULL IN PENNA.—AS SEEN FROM BACKSTAGE

Donald R. Richberg, one-time NRA head, spoke wisely when he told the Advertising Federation the other day: "We do not need any patented programs of reform. . . . We do not need to search for panaceas. There are none. We do not need any more fighting leaders to array one class against another. . . . What we do earnestly need is to consolidate the power of all the people, regardless of party, creed or class, who want an opportunity to work together."

To accomplish this great end is the people's difficult task. They can not look to their present Government for help. But their votes can be their salvation. They still have their great rich country. They still have their priceless heritage of freedom. They can, if they will, set up a Government that will be their servant, not their master; that will help them get real jobs at real wages; that will stop the reckless spending of their money; that will throw open to them the gates of opportunity.

What's wrong with America? Nothing, thank God, that can not be made right at the ballot box, beginning with the Congressional election in November.

"And they list her HOUSEWIFE"

On census report, or tax return, she may be listed only "housewife," while her husband bears the more definite title of "lawyer," or "doctor," or "storekeeper."

But housewife hardly does this wife and mother justice. She is the modern Jill-of-all-trades. Her job includes being dietician, interior decorator, costume designer, gardener, chauffeur — not to mention educator and health authority.

How does she get away with it? She is informed! Just as her husband depends upon business news in this paper, she finds in the advertising pages the latest facts and price quotations on all the materials needed for her various jobs.

Food for the family? Butcher and grocer answer on these pages. . . . Curtains, spring dresses for mother and daughter, slip covers? Department store and specialty shop are ready. She has preferences about fuels and milk, dental creams and even motor oil — all determined by her persistent, intelligent reading of advertisements.

That's why, when she is termed officially "housewife," she can run six jobs instead of one, and have time left over for amusement and relaxation. (The advertisements help her here too.)

"The STOLEN GOD" by EDISON MARSHALL

CHAPTER XXVIII

In a few minutes they were at the Residence, talking in low tones to the wide-eyed governor. There it was agreed to blame the crime on street bandits and not let Chambon and Pu-Bow know they were under suspicion. Otherwise they would walk with care, delay their plot against the Emerald Buddha, and Ned's chance to recover the idol in time for the winter feast would be lost.

Griffin and Ned were nearly back to the bungalow before either of them broached the final and most troubling question. Then Griffin blurted out.

"Good Heavens, man, what shall I tell Virginia?"

"The truth," Ned answered. "No one who loves her could have any other choice." He knew—because he was among the number.

"I see trouble coming. She'll know that at the worst André is the victim of circumstances. Incredible though they are. And she is a woman."

In the morning Ned stole his heart for the hardest ordeals of his life. They began with meeting Pu-Bow at the servants' breakfast.

It was no easy thing to greet him with a pleasant word, and dip in the same rice-pot with that red hand.

"Our lords will be hungry enough to dip with us too, unless I can soon find them another cook," Ned said in calloused tones.

Pu-Bow's slanted eyes did not even flicker. "Is that your way to break the news? But we have heard it already from the policeman in the courtyard. And you, T'Fan, held him in your arms as he died."

"Yes, and his blood all but ruined my sargon. But I frightened away the thieves before they could take his purse, and it will pay for the washing—and perhaps a little extra."

"You bear his loss staunchly. It seemed to us all that you two were good friends. I remember the night by the camp-fire, when my hands were a little heavy upon his head."

"He was an old man and faithful. You got no less than you deserved, Pu-Bow."

"I grant it now—yes, and I like you no more for the bold ring of your words."

"What is it to me, whether one of my coolies likes or does not like what I choose to say?"

Pu-Bow smiled knowingly—but Ned bit back the rage and hate of his heart and smiled in return. "Come tonight to a meeting of your fellow chiefs at the joss-house, T'Fan." Pu-Bow murmured, "and you may find understanding."

In the meantime old Nokka sat by, humbly waiting her turn at the rice-pot, saying not a word to interrupt the parley, and without a trace of expression in her dull, slanted eyes. Yet only last night a command from her thin lips had made Koh-Ken a corpse, her son a murderer, and a white man an accessory to the crime.

A few minutes later Chambon himself called Ned to the lounge and questioned him in Griffin's presence. It was the finest dissembling Ned, an expert in the art, had ever seen; he could not catch one false tone or guilty glance. It was as though Chambon had really been asleep during the crime; the surprise in his eyes at the details Ned narrated was incredibly real. Griffin began to doubt his guilt; Ned himself would have acquitted him save for his victim's dying words.

After the talk, Chambon called up one of the native drivers. "If I am needed at the old fellow's burial, I want to go with a native guide to the Cave of the Million Buddhas," he told Griffin. "But I will be back in an hour with a surprise for you to brighten this sad day."

Griffin had to nod. Ned, too, was caught off balance. He saw no way to have Chambon trailed on such short notice and in broad daylight, and there was nothing to do but let him steal his march and seek his footprints later.

When he had gone, Virginia appeared in the door and raised her hand. Ned followed her into the little reading-room, haunted by the ghosts of last night's happiness. But those airy little wraiths hid in the dusty corners when these two met face to face.

"Father told me of the charge you've made against André," the girl began. She was pale, but her eyes were intensely bright. "It isn't true."

Ned could not answer or make a sign.

"Ned, you know it isn't true," she cried. "No matter what has happened, André would never consent to—"

"You needn't say it," Ned told her gently.

"Murder." She said it at last, clearly.

Then she waited for him to answer. But although he was cut to the quick by the unshed tears swelling her eyelids, Koh-Ken's ghost rose between them and he could not tell the lie that she longed to hear.

Worse still, he dared not even touch her hand.

"We'll talk about it later," he murmured at last. And he turned, asking her leave to go.

Her hand went to her breast. "You— you don't believe me?"

He made no sign, but she read the truth in his eyes.

"But you have only Koh-Ken's dying word," she pleaded. "Perhaps he meant to say some one else. You saw him go out, and the spy saw him enter the house, but that too might be explained. And the glimpse of his clothes in the darkness—" But her words died away as she saw they were all waste.

"All that can wait for his trial," he told her. "In the meantime, let's declare it a closed subject between you and me."

"Wait." Her breast swelled; she spoke in clear tones. "Do you mean you're going to have him prosecuted?"

Escape was cut off. It was always so. But his profound pride, the gift of the East, made him stand to his fate.

"Yes, I'm going to have him prosecuted," he answered at last. "Koh-Ken was my servant—and my friend."

"Oh, I know he was!" The tears gleamed and dried on her fevered eyes. "But you can't help him by bringing ruin and disgrace to one who may be an innocent man."

"He'll have a chance to prove his innocence." Then, racked beyond endurance, "But I don't think he'll succeed, by the time I've got the whole story."

"And you expect me to help you get it?"

"Not any more. I expect you to do everything you can to save the man you love. I suppose I'd want you to."

She was silent a little while. "Then we may as well settle everything right now. Listen to me, Ned. Suppose—although I don't admit the possibility—he was there with Pu-Bow last night; suppose he didn't try to stop the crime. He'd still be only the victim of circumstances. I know, if you don't, how fine his nature is, how noble in so many ways—if he let Koh-Ken be killed before his eyes, it was because he was out of his mind, crazed by this strange thing he's trying to do. She stepped nearer, her power increased. "The law might not save him, but you can," she went on. "It's in your power to do a little wrong for a great right. Ned, I ask you to join me in helping him all you can."

Ned's face was drawn, wet with sweat. But he shook his head.

"Wait! Last night, in this very room, you said you loved me. Ned, was it true?"

"It was true. It will always be true."

"Then I ask you in the name of that love to let André go free."

"You put it up to me mighty strong, Virginia. But I tell you no."

"Perhaps you don't understand. I'm not pleading for my lover. André and I have parted for good. Even before this thing happened, I realized I did not love him enough to marry him—that there was some great barrier, still unknown, between us. But until this thing happened—there was no real barrier between you—and me."

"And now?"

"We were drawing closer together every hour. In a little while—perhaps even now—I could learn to love you as you love me. But if you send André to the guillotine or to prison, I can never love you, never forgive you, never forget that your vengeance has meant more to you than pity and mercy for me and for my friend. Tell me now! What are you going to do?"

Their eyes met.

"I'm going to keep faith with Koh-Ken," he told her.

In the promised hour, Chambon returned from his trip to the Cave of the Buddhas. He came in glowing and excited, carrying a large object wrapped in grass matting.

"See, Père Griffin, what I have brought you," he said, putting the parcel down and waving his hands. He was brimming over with enthusiasm that no rascal on earth could fake. "Now you will not be sorry you have come on this long journey. Open it quickly."

Half-dazed, Griffin began to remove the matting. He would not be in the least surprised to see the Emerald Buddha gleaming underneath. It would be the last thing on earth to expect, grinning anticlimax, but this would make it all the more likely, a last jarring crash of the keys to complete the disharmony that had gone before.

But the package did not contain the Emerald Buddha. Under the matting was a magnificent bronze jar, with two iron rings held by the mouths of tiger heads chiseled on the sides, its whole surface decorated with an art forgotten before the fall of Rome.

"It is Au jar of the Han dynasty," Chambon told him, almost too excited to articulate. "Look at it, Père Griffin—it is yours. How glorious! How wonderful!"

"Wonderful," Griffin echoed in awed tones. But he was looking not at the vase, but at Chambon.

And a few minutes later the desperate game swept on. "André, if this is the prize you've been working for, we may as well be rolling along on our journey," Griffin said blandly.

In a flash, Chambon changed from a laughing boy to a being utterly strange, as though a mummy had come to life out of that bronze jar.

"Oh, not yet, Père Griffin! There are still many things to see."

And things to do, it seemed! At least Griffin could feel reasonably sure that the Emerald Buddha was still in the neighborhood and the plot against it had not yet gone through.

BRISTOL

Half a dozen technical directors and their assistants were employed during the filming of Grand National's "Wallaby Jim of the Islands," which will be screened at the Bristol Theatre today, as the first of a series of romantic dramas of the South Seas, starring George Houston, based on the popular "Wallaby Jim" stories, which appeared originally in Collier's magazine, by Albert Richard Wetjen.

Dealing with the adventures and exploits of a daring, rollicking skipper of a pearl-fishing schooner, "Wallaby Jim of the Islands" calls for some very unusual settings with the locales in and about the Tahitian islands. Every detail in the picture had to be scrupulously correct, such as the native pearl diving, the costumes and homes of the natives, the atmospheric conditions and the general mannerisms and customs.

Gracie Allen, George Burns and Martha Raye, who panicked audiences in "College Holiday," head the all-star cast of the new Paramount musical comedy, "College Swing" which will open Sunday at the Bristol Theatre. In this story of a collegiate nitwit who takes over a leading American university and runs it to suit herself, the three gay clowns are assisted in their antics by Bob Hope, who climbed into the top drawer of stardom by virtue of his single performance as the master of ceremonies in the recent "Big Broadcast of 1938."

The story of "College Swing" is the high-geared fantasy which has always provided Burns and Allen with their most successful material. It opens in Puritan times with a wealthy old New Englander making a will bequeathing the college he has founded to the first female member of his family who passes an examination in it. The camera then slides on down two centuries and shows Gracie, his descendant, getting herself in shape for the big test.

ROHM & HAAS NINE WINS SIXTH STRAIGHT

Continuing its drive for the second half championship, the Rohm and Haas baseball nine won its sixth straight triumph of the second half last evening, winning over the second place Grundy team, 3-1, on the Maple Beach field.

One bad inning, the fourth, caused Joe Antonelli the victory. Joe was sailing along beautifully until he hit the bad spurt. George Ritter started it by beating out a hit to second, and advancing on Barroth's error. Gallagher fled to first, John Dougherty singled both runners across the plate. Dougherty went out trying to score on a hit by Sullivan. Sullivan went to second on the play and scored on Oppman's bingle to left.

All that and a single by Bunny Brunner in the first represented the only safe whacks made off Antonelli. In the second, third, fifth, and sixth inning the chemical workers were retired in one, two, three order.

Eddie Jeffries did the hill work for the winners, holding the woolen twist-ers to four hits, two of which went to Harry Barroth. Barroth was instrumental in scoring the Grundy run. He doubled in the sixth and crossed Stanley Dick's hit. However, Dick tried to stretch the hit and went out, Brunner to Gallagher.

The Rohm and Haas team did not commit an error while the Frymen had two charged against them.

PARIS — (INS) — The dromedary which carried Napoleon Bonaparte on his Egyptian campaign is coming to Paris. It will figure in an exhibition shortly to be opened at the Louvre Museum dealing with Napoleon's Egyptian war.

OSAKA — (INS) — A group of 40 geisha recently purchased $3,500 worth of patriotic government bonds. Geisha continue to prosper in Japan despite difficulties that have visited other professions. Japan, it seems, is self-sufficient in geishas, so they are not affected by import control laws.

Expect New Records At 1938 Air Races

Bendix Trophy Race and the Thompson; the races will last but three days instead of four, and there will be qualifying trials but no qualifying races.

The object of banning Bendix ships in the Thompson is to further the development of different types of craft. Air Race officials this year are hopeful that more transport ships will be entered in the Bendix race. The Thompson, naturally, is for smaller, extremely high-powered, easily maneuverable planes.

The races were cut from four days to three to concentrate the events. September 3 will be Bendix day, September 4, Greve day, and September 5, Thompson day. The Greve Trophy race is a 200-mile event over a ten-mile course, limited to engines of 549 cubic inches displacement or less.

The Thompson race this year will draw many of the already famous racing pilots, and may develop a few more. Certainly it will see at least one new plane, and three or four whose speed has been materially increased. It will be 300 miles over a 10-mile course.

Earl Ortmann will be on hand with his Keith-Ryder, the ship that finished second last year and with a change of spark plugs and a few minor adjustments broke all closed course records for land planes in the recent Oakland, Calif., races. Ortmann's time at Oakland was well over 265 miles per hour, as was that of Col. Roscoe Turner, who finished a fraction of a second and a few feet behind.

Turner also broke the closed course record, set by Michel DeTroyat, of France, in the 1936 races at Los Angeles. Both Turner and Ortmann fly behind twin-row radial engines developing around 1,100 horsepower.

Steve Wittman, the Oshkosh, Wis., flyer, who builds his own ships, will be entered again. Wittman has rebuilt his big D-12 job again, and is reported to have cut his wing surface even more. The D-12, a liquid-cooled, 12-cylinder engine, in Wittman's ship is of uncertain age, but always in finest condition. The same ship led the Thompson contestants at record-breaking speed for more than 17 laps last year, but Wittman was forced to fly high and lost speed when his propeller struck a bird and an oil line broke.

The personal rivalry between these three should make the Thompson an historic event, if nothing else does. Last year Turner was on Wittman's tail throughout not only the Thompson but the unscheduled qualifying race as well, and the Oakland race should whet Turner's appetite for a victory over Ortmann.

In addition, the new ships will provide real competition. Cliff Henderson, managing director of the air races, is enthusiastic over a new plane developed on the coast by Lee Williams. It is powered by a new 12-cylinder, liquid-cooled engine that will be supercharged to more than 1,000 horsepower. Henderson also reports that Keith-Ryder is developing a ship powered by the latest in inverted six-cylinder air-cooled engines.

The two new planes, along with Ortmann's, Turner's and Wittman's, will insure competition of the very fastest sort, Henderson said.

JUNE NEWS REVIEW

By Arthur J. Carruth III.
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

Man and nature took turns shaking an already stunned world during June. Civilians in Canton were blasted to death in an unprecedented series of Japanese air bombings, while in Spain General Franco's forces rained death and destruction with no regard for non-combatants.

French, British and United States governments went unheeded. In the height of the bombardments, the most severe earthquake in Western Europe in many years toppled weaker buildings, but without widespread damage.

At home, a twelve-billion-dollar Congress wound up its labors. A federal grand jury returned indictments naming eighteen persons for German government espionage service in the United States. The New Deal nursed its wounds as the result of administration-backed Otha Wearin's defeat by Sen. Guy M. Gillette in the Iowa primaries.

An ashamed nation chalked up another kidnapping outrage, but G-men quickly nabbed and obtained a complete confession from the abductor and killer of little James Cash, Jr., in Florida. The federal agents resumed investigation of the unsolved Levine case.

All over the nation commencement and baccalaureate activities took the spotlight, as universities and colleges turned out their annual crop of graduates to vie for the already too-few jobs of lean years.

The Government

A twelve-billion-dollar spending program its outstanding achievement, the seventy-fifth Congress adjourned its final session. In its last few days it passed the controversial wage-hour bill as reported by a joint conference committee; passed the relief-recovery measure carrying about $3,750,000,000 in new money, appropriations and authorizations; over-rode the President's veto on the emergency farm credit interest bill; disregarded Roosevelt's plea for legislation to help the nation's railroads.

Time for war debt payments rolled around again, and Uncle Sam pocketed only $171,763 of the $1,891,661,900 due. Little Finland came through in full as usual; a dozen others defaulted.

Germany's contention that the Reich is not responsible for the foreign debts of the former Austria is contrary to the opinion of the United States, Secretary Hull revealed.

Political observers shouted wildly at the primary defeat of Otha Wearin, WPA-backed senatorial candidate in Iowa, by Guy M. Gillette, who refused support of the administration's supreme court plan.

President Roosevelt announced plans for a cross-country tour to San Francisco, where he will embark on a fishing expedition, next month.

Rep. Arthur B. Jenks, of New Hampshire, was unseated by Democratic members of the house, in favor of Democratic Alphonse Roy.

In a 5 to 1 decision, the Supreme Court bumped Secretary Wallace and Solicitor General Robert H. Jackson by refusing to review the Kansas City Stockyards case; declared unwarranted and unfounded their charges that the court previously reversed itself.

Labor

With a split in the United Automobile Workers over the suspension of five officers, Homer Martin, president, announced a purge of all Communist members from the union's ranks, and looked to the next convention for action.

A new cause for further unemployment was seen by Alfred P. Sloan, General Motors head, in the wages and hours bill.

Declaring his company trapped by "President Roosevelt's great experiment, Gov. Frank Murphy's labor policies and Michigan's high labor rates," Walter L. Fry, one-time employer-sit-downer, said he would move most of his business from Detroit to Georgia.

"I know times are tough," New York Park Commissioner Robert Moses counseled students at N. Y. U., "because I have to employ quite a few people, some from civil service, some from contractors, and unfortunately quite a few from the relief authorities."

At London, Ky., in a sweltering courtroom, Harlan county mine operators and peace officers took up their defense to charges of conspiracy against union labor, as the trial went into its sixth week.

The Ford Motor Company's contest of a NLRB order requiring the company's compliance with the Wagner act will be carried to the Supreme Court, the company notified the sixth Federal Circuit Court.

Ringling Brothers, Barnum & Bailey circus was forced to close at Scranton, Pa., when employees refused to take a 25 per cent wage cut.

In New York, seventy officers, delegates and members of Local 807, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Stabblers and Helpers of America, and six outsiders, were named in a federal grand jury indictment charging violation of the anti-racketeering act by charging out-of-town truckers for the privilege of delivering goods to New York City.

The Nation

Pleading guilty to the crime, Franklin Pierce McCall, 21-year-old minister's son, was sentenced to die in the electric chair for the fatal kidnapping of Jimmie Cash at Princeton, Fla. Justice moved swiftly after G-men arrested McCall, obtained a full confession, found the body of the murdered child and recovered all but $5 of the $10,000 ransom payment.

A bridge weakened by suddenly rising flood waters, the Olympian, crack train of the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific railroad, plunged into Custer Creek near Miles City, Mont. Sleeping passengers were drowned or crushed in one of the most disastrous train wrecks in recent years.

Jersey City's Mayor Frank Hague, on the witness stand in the "free speech" injunction trial, clashed again and again with Morris Ernst, C. I. O. counsel; proposed a concentration camp in Alaska for native-born "reds" and deportation of alien radicals.

Rotten eggs and over-ripe tomatoes proved too much for Socialist leader Norman Thomas when he tried to speak in Newark, even though he had the necessary permit. Mayor Hague claimed support in his campaign when 30,000 turned out for an Americanism parade and rally.

Eighteen persons, including officers in the German war ministry, were indicted by a federal grand jury in New York in a sensational espionage inquiry, and charged with stealing United States military defense secrets. All but four of the alleged operatives had skipped to Germany before the indictments were handed up.

A TWA airliner, missing since it ran into a California storm March 1, was found near the Yosemite Valley by a young gold prospector. The ill-fated plane yielded nine victims.

Speakers, in general, did not promise great things ahead for college graduates in this year's crop of commencement addresses and baccalaureate sermons but June, the month of brides, again was the month of cap and gown, and honorary degrees. Columbia University conferred 4,826 degrees in its 184th annual commencement.

The World

The great powers were awed by Japanese and Spanish insurgent bombings of civilians and neutrals, and their property, but strong protests of the United States, Britain and France were ineffective. Thousands of non-combatants died in Canton as incessant air raids wrecked the metropolis. British and French ships were attacked by Spanish planes; French territory near the border and the British-owned port of Gandia bombed.

The war in China took a turn-about later when the Japanese had to fight flood waters of the Yellow River for their lives. Chinese took advantage of enemy detachments cut off from their main army. The nations blamed each other for causing the floods.

Recurrent earthquake shocks were felt in Belgium, France, the Netherlands, England and Germany. Three persons were killed and 20 injured in Belgium. A land slide in the North Sea was advanced as probable cause of the tremors.

Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh and two sons moved into an island castle off the coast of Brittany. The flier revealed he had received threats against the children, from America, but has no intention of giving up citizenship.

Dr. Sigmund Freud, 82, "father of psycho-analysis," arrived in England. Told his daughter, "Everything we owned has been taken away."

Four Canadian mothers accepted $100,000 each, two others $12,500 consolation awards each, in settlement of the legal quibbling over the Charles Miller "stork derby."

Running of the English Derby—won by Bois Roussel—netted American sweepstakes ticket holders a total of $3,920,050. The United States spent $6,800,000 on tickets.

Czechoslovakia's municipal elections failed to produce serious disorder. Henleinists took the votes in German localities, while Czechs were just as successful where they predominated.

A daughter was born to the Duchess of Norfolk, 22, England's youngest duchess.
